Make Your Racing Analysis Much Easier

By Michael Wilding

It's common practice for punters to start their racing analysis about half way through the process. This is because it has become generally accepted that to make a profit at horse racing you need to find...

...the winner!

Don't worry, I'm not going to argue that you don't need to find the winner of the race (although that does depend to an extent on your bet type) but what I want to show you right now, is that by doing this you are making it much harder to make a profit.

Why?

Because if you start by looking for the winner you have missed out on a crucial stepping stone. It's like standing at the edge of the lake and trying to jump to the island in the middle straight away, rather than using the stepping stone between you and the island.

When you first start your form reading what you should be doing is focusing on one thing only, and that one thing is not finding the winner.

It's finding contenders.

We can classify a contender as a group of horses that have a very strong chance of winning the race. It's this group we should be focusing our initial analysis on.

The reason is, that there's usually more than one horse that has a strong chance of winning a race, in fact there is often more than two. By jumping straight into looking for a winner we're making the job much harder for ourselves. Most successful bettors are only going to win about 20% of the time, if you start by focusing your efforts on finding contenders then you should be able to pick a group of 3 containing the winner around 70% of the time.

As you can see the difference is huge.

Just psychologically this stage is very necessary because it is easier to do and the success boosts moral and gives confidence to continue. There are different methods of classifying a contender but my personal is a horse that finishes within 2 lengths of the winner. I actually adjust this slightly depending on the race conditions but starting with 2 lengths is a very good starting point.

So what we want to do is change your approach. It doesn't matter whether you are using ratings, form reading or building systems. The first step should always be to identify the horses within your racing niche that are contenders in the race. As always, you should be focusing on a specific niche within racing to do this on.

Once you are finding the contenders then the jump to making a profit is comparatively easy.

Why?

Because you are already finding the runners that are strongest to win the race. All you need to do now is determine the best way to bet them. And a little tip for you here...

Betting the strongest is not always going to make you the most profit!

By changing your approach to this you are going from something that is very difficult...

- Look for a single horse that is going to win the race

To something that is significantly easier...

- Look for multiple horses that have a strong chance of being near the winner

I assure you that if you start to do this you will find your racing analysis becomes much easier.

Koeman Is The Sack Race Favourite - By Rick Elliott

It's another international break in football and it has come at the worst time for Ronald Koeman. The Everton manager is the favourite for the next Premier League manager to get the boot and traditionally Everton are not a sacking organization. However, when there are rows of empty seats and booing supporters of the People's Club are making a clear statement to the hierarchy.

Koeman is steeped in the tradition of Holland and Barcelona. He scored the first goal for Holland that effectively meant England did not qualify for the 1994 World Cup. When Barcelona beat Sampdoria 1-0 in the final of the European Cup at Wembley in 1992 Koeman scored the winning goal for a Barca team that included Pep Guardiola in midfield. Their managerial careers are now poles apart.

While Manchester City are odds-on to win the Premier League Ronald Koeman is 4/7 with Ladbrokes to be the next Premier League manager to leave his job which could be through a sacking or resignation. Koeman is destined to be the manager of Holland and/or Barcelona and he could soon be in a position to take one of the jobs because his days look numbered at Everton.

Enable was a stunning winner of the Arc yesterday but it's the sublime to the ridiculous with the racing today. After a brilliant performance in the most prestigious race in Europe it's back to typical Monday fare with ordinary meetings at Stratford, Newton Abbott and Bath. The theory that identified Cote D'Azur as a leading contender for the frame in the Cambridgeshire on Saturday (3rd at 66/1) has pinpointed Suffice (Stratford 3pm) as a horse to back.

Suffice is top rated and with a rider's allowance in a thirteen runner handicap so each way bets are settled at one quarter the odds. The horse has been off for a year but is suited to the conditions of today's race. The price is not as generous as Cote D'Azur's but SUFFICE is the standout each way bet today at 14/1 with William Hill.
