How To Find Winner After Winner After Winner - By

Michael Wilding

Everyone wants to find a winner, the difficult part is doing it with any form of regularity. I'm going to reveal a method that you may never have seen before which is going to help you pick winners time and time again. Some of the steps you may have come across before and others you may not. Either way they are all important in finding those elusive winners.

As always I recommend that you take these steps, become familiar with them and then develop them further to suit your own style of betting and the races you prefer to bet on. Do that and you will find yourself walking away from the bookies with cash in your pocket.

Throughout the rest of this article I am going to assume that you are using races where the majority of runners have raced a minimum of five times, if they have raced ten or more times then even better.

The first step in finding winners is...

...to look for horses that have won!

This may seem obvious, but the majority of people don't do this. They delve straight into the form and start trying to decipher whether a horse's run was good or bad, whether the ground suited it or not.

All of this is very important and useful information, but if a horse has run fifteen races and never won are you sure you want to be spending a lot of time on analysing the form for that runner? Do you want to bet on a horse that hasn't won a single race in fifteen?

Unless there is a very good reason to suspect that it is either going to break the form of everything it has done to date, or its previous races contained a lot of places where the runner came just a very short distance from the winner, then the answer is almost certainly going to be no.

Don't waste your time analysing horses who don't have any chance of winning a race.

I can already hear some people saying that sometimes these horses win, and the truth is you're right. They do. But if you choose a 90/1 winner then the chances are you picked it more by luck than anything else, and if you look at all the losers you are going to get from these horses I can assure you that it isn't worth it!

So the first thing you should do is work out how many winners a horse has had, in a percentage, and make a note next to each horse. Do this for a few races and you are going to find four common patterns.

1. Most runners in the race have a high winning percentage of 30% and higher. If the horses have only had a few races this can be 75% and higher.
2. Most runners in the race have a very low winning percentage or have not won a race.
3. All the horses have won a few races and have very similar percentages.
4. A few of the horses have a higher winning percentage and the rest are low or haven't won a race before.

Is it possible to find the winner in any of these four situations. Of course. Do you want to? Not at the moment.

When you making a good profit from the easiest type of race to analyse then it makes sense to start looking at the next hardest race to increase your profit. But, if you aren't making a profit in the easiest races to analyse why would you want to move on to more difficult ones!

This means that we want to focus on the last pattern, number four. A race where a few horses have won a high percentage of races and the rest have a low percent or have never won means that you have a few runners who have proven themselves strong in a field where most haven't.

That is a perfect type of race for us to analyse because the field has already been narrowed down for us. But, we want to double check those poor horses are really poor before we move on.

So for each of the horses with a poor winning percentage in turn, we open their form history and check how many times each horse has finished within a length of the winner. And we work out what percentage of the total horses races this is.

For example, if a horse has never won but has finished within one length of the winner twice in it's ten races, then we mark this horse down as having performed strongly 20% of the time even though it hasn't won.

Any horse that has a very high figure (i.e. 50% and above) you should consider as a threat and make a mark next to. The rest you can dismiss.

You will now have a shortlist of the best horses in the race. If you want you could consider simply dutching these runners, however I suggest that you take this further with just two more simple steps.

From your shortlist open up each horses form and check to see if any of them have NEVER won or come within one length on the current race type as today. If they have never won on the same race type as today then remove them from your shortlist. Of course it is possible that they will win for the first time in this race, but we are looking for proven horses so we have a high strike rate of winners.

Repeat this but using ground conditions. But don't simply use the ground condition as it is shown on the race card, this is often not correct. You need to go to the BHA website where the going is shown as reported by the going stick. Using the going stick rating on this page and the break down of what each rating means, which you can find here, you can determine the accurate going at the track.

Once you know this we perform the same procedure that we did with the race types on our remaining horses, but we are a bit more lenient. For example if a horse hasn't won or come within one length of the winner on a good going (going stick reading of 7.9), but has on a good to firm reading of 8.5 then this can still be considered as a good performance.

In other words if the ground is similar enough to be unlikely to cause the horse a problem then we can include it.

By now you are going to have between two and four horses left most of the time and you have found the most likely winners for the race. There are numerous ways that you could bet them including backing, dutching, forecasts, exactas and place betting. These selections should win with a very high strike rate but how you bet them will depend on your own preferences to risk and odds. If you are happy to take smaller returns and more regular winnings then you may want to dutch, if you prefer larger odds and less regular winnings then you may consider putting them into exotic bets such as exactas, placepots etc.

The End Could Be Nigh For Conte

Antonio Conte is the favourite at 1/2 with Betfair in the market for the next Premier League manager to leave his job and it could be no offers for the Chelsea manager if the team get beaten by West Brom at Stamford Bridge tonight. A pattern is emerging of Chelsea winning the title and then being hopeless the following season. The last time it happened Jose Mourinho got fired and the same fate awaits Conte. The Special One lost the players two seasons ago and Conte is a man treading water and it could be all over if Chelsea don't win tonight's match against the team who are bottom of the table. Chelsea must beat West Brom or Conte is probably losing his job.

In normal circumstances a home team should beat opponents who are 15 places and 30 points below them in the Premier League. A home win would be a banker bet but if the players are not 100% committed that is not guaranteed. West Brom have scored just seven goals in 11 league fixtures away from home and nobody have found the net fewer times on their travels. However, they have scored in all but one of their last eight matches and Chelsea look vulnerable at the back. The Blues have lost their last two matches conceding seven goals in the process. Desperate times call for desperate measures and class should prevail tonight so the standout bet is CHELSEA to win and BOTH TEAMS TO SCORE at 11/5 with Ladbrokes.

England must beat New Zealand early tomorrow morning to have any chance of playing Australia in the final of this T20 Tri-Series. The sides have only met at the Wellington ground in this format once before and England won the match by 10 wickets in 2013. However, much of the personnel has changed so that match has little relevance as a form guide. Both teams have lost their last three matches in the shortest format of the game but England have won the last two T20 meetings. It's virtually a playoff to determine who plays Australia in the final and latest form can be key which means ENGLAND should be backed at 10/11 with William Hill.
