Today's Sports Betting Preview - By Rick Elliott

Villa On Track For Wembley Showdown With Fulham

Aston Villa have a one-nil lead over Middlesbrough ahead of the home leg of the Championship playoff semi-final and Fulham await the winners of the tie in the final at Wembley. The match that decides which team earns promotion to the Premier League has been described as the most lucrative in football. The vast gap in income for Premier League and Championship clubs makes the fixture a golden ticket to the Promised Land. The third best team in the league deserves that reward.

Fulham finished third during the regular season and are the best team still in the playoffs. Derby were tough not to crack but Fulham beat them 2-1 over two legs of the semi-final tie. They only missed out on automatic promotion in the last league fixture of the season so FULHAM are the team to back at 8/11 with Betfair to win the Championship playoffs and earn a place in the top tier.

The home side in tonight's match in Aston Villa are the favourites to progress and on form the market confidence in the Birmingham outfit should be justified. Playoff matches are often tight affairs but Villa were value for a much bigger lead to take into the home leg. They are managed by Steve Bruce who has taken two teams into the Premier League.

It's worth bearing in mind that there has not been a home win in the last 12 meetings but a draw should suffice for Villa. They have not lost a home league match for six months and Boro have won twice on the road in nine fixtures. It might not be pretty and the match is unlikely to produce a feast of goals but ASTON VILLA are the bet in tonight's match in 90 minutes at 5/4 with William Hill.

There is a mixture of three jumps meetings and three fixtures on the Flat in the UK and Ireland today, including three this evening. You can bet on horse racing from 2pm to 840pm but its more about quantity than quality. Killarney is the most lucrative fixture and offers up to about one third more in prize money than any one fixture on the mainland but winners are paid in Euro and not pounds. The currency of the cheque is irrelevant in the 6.10 race because AISOLAS is a progressive horse who can win at this level and the 7/4 with Ladbrokes is worth taking.

How Important Is The Draw In Horse Racing? - By High Roller Racing

As you all know the starting stalls are used in horse racing on the flat but not over obstacles or National Hunt flat races. The drawn position can give you a winning chance or if badly drawn it can prevent you from winning even though you maybe are the best horse in the race. Throughout the UK the courses are not the same design and therefore apart from horse, jockey, going and horses wearing blinkers, visors, cheekpieces, tongue ties we have to decide if the draw is in our favour too! Well who said this sport was easy? Definitely not me.

I am going to give you an example of some of the courses in the UK where the draw is so very important... what you must remember is I am not saying a horse cannot win from an unfavourable draw but in general it doesn't happen too much.

Lingfield has a turf course where it is usually very favourable to be drawn high as the stats show this is very favourable with races over five furlongs, six furlongs and seven furlongs. The highest drawn horse has a terrific record here and if you don't have the high draw your chance of winning is vastly reduced.

Thirsk racecourse has on good going or better a very strong bias in favour of a high numbered draw in sprint races. In fact in general it is thought you have little chance if not drawn high in these sprints. On soft ground the results show the bias doesn't seem to exist.

Beverley seems to have the most famous bias in horse racing because unless you have a low draw you just do not appear to be able to win over five furlongs on any going. The higher your draw the less chance you have.

Bath is a left handed course with a left handed 'dogleg' turn which you would assume to be in favour of low drawn horses but nothing is so untrue as the high numbers have a massive advantage here over sprint trips. The going does not affect the bias.

Chester racecourse seems to have a general bias in favour of low numbers in sprint races. The higher your draw the less chance of winning.

Obviously some horses do win from a bad draw but the percentage call is let them do it because overall the draw does significantly affect your opportunity to win.

There is a website you can read about the bias on UK races and that is called drawbias.com. It's free and is a very useful tool to have in your fight to find winners. Check it out.

Tuesday's Horses In Focus - By Unity Racing Investments

Sorry it's so short but there is only one horse i am interested in today. It has been a great week for us with a huge winner at 33/1 advised Great Colaci and a big gamble the horse hadn't been in great form but we got the nod and well what an improved performance.

We also had a good win from MANOR PARK backed at 6/1 and going off at 3/1 all in all it has been a decent May we have hit the cross bar a few too many times but we are back on track.

Today's horses in focus will be short but sweet as there is only one horse that I want to talk about and a leap of faith may be required. I have heard that a big run is expected from HOKE COLBURN in the 8.30 at Southwell. Currently priced at 14/1 connections are on today as they think they have found the key to this delicate type. Last run he was pulled up so lets hope they are right and we get a good run for our money.
