Good News For The Punter - By Betworld Reviews

Almost every forum or site offering opportunity for the punter to comment has stories about the restrictions and account closures imposed by bookmakers. As discussed previously the event markets are not now managed properly by the bookies who prefer to just take the easy way out and avoid taking the risks they are supposed to be set up for.

So it is good to hear today that Bet Victor have joined Black Type and are now offering a guaranteed bet option for UK and Irish Horse Racing which will mean any punter should be able to win up to £500 – if the bet is successful of course! The full press release gives details which also offer some hope for those who are already restricted.

The change of heart comes about thanks to some great lobbying by the Horseracing Bettors Forum which is chaired by Matt Bisogno of Geegee fame. Excellent work and while it is early days and the practical operation of the scheme has yet to be tested hopefully where one of the larger bookies goes the others will follow.

AN INTELLIGENT WAY TO USE THE NEW FREEDOM

It is all very well being able to win £500 but you have to have the skill to place your bets properly in order to achieve this.

A service that I have been watching now for some 6 months since its launch is Racing Intelligence. Selections are sourced from bookmaker insiders and average about 1 per day. Both win and each way bets are recommended.

After a slow start the service has progressed well and is currently showing a 211 point profit at an astonishing ROI of 41.75%. Some 46% of the bets produce a return.

Perhaps an ideal opportunity to test out Bet Victors new found generosity?

Today's Sports Betting Preview - By Rick Elliott

It's All About Leeds United Tonight

Many years ago when football had only just started being played in colour on television Leeds United were the best team in the land. However, the side under manager Don Revie were unloved and Brian Clough was not a fan of how they played. In the 1991-92 season every one loved Leeds because they prevented Manchester United winning the last First Division title before the start of the Premier League era. The current LEEDS side are playing great football and can make it five wins in as many matches in all competitions by picking up three points at Swansea in the Championship and an away win is 11/8 with Ladbrokes.

Leeds have had 11 managers in five years and Marcelo Biesla is the current man in charge. His background is football in Argentina but he likes his side to play the beautiful game in a beautiful way. One of his former players is Mauricio Pochettino who has a similar philosophy about effective football. Swansea have made a solid start to the season in terms of points won but they have had a great deal of luck in remaining unbeaten in the Championship after three matches. An away win in tonight's fixture would take LEEDS to the top of the table and the price of 9/2 with Betfair for the title would be cut because at the moment they are the best team.

It's the final stages of qualifying for the Champions League this week but there are no representatives from Britain. The qualifying process for this season's group stage seemed to begin before the end of last season. The top four teams in the Premier League qualify for the Holy Grain of European football. MANCHESTER CITY were scared out of the competition at the quarter-final stage by Liverpool last season. However, they are the ante post selection to be the champions of Europe for the first time and that outcome is 11/2 with bet365.

The wonderful four day York Ebor meeting begins tomorrow and the racing today is more about quantity than quality. There are six meetings in Britain and Ireland and the most lucrative only offers £79,000 in prize money. Hamilton has a competitive handicap over one mile and one furlong at 2.50pm. FALMOUTH LIGHT goes well fresh and the horse can win this race after an 80-day absence at 6/1 with Coral.

Don't Forget The Draw Is So Important - By High Roller Racing

At times people looking at horses choose selections with the best form, the best jockey or even a trainer that's in great form but for some reason they ignore the draw... the stall that the selection is running from. That's really a little foolish because you can have the best horse in the race which is trained by the best trainer but because of the stall number drawn the horse has a more difficult chance than the form predicts.

Some racecourses are fairly straight forward but there are lots of courses where if you get the wrong draw it is very difficult to win from.

Let's give you some examples:-

A) Take a course like Beverley where unless you are drawn low in the five furlongs races you have a much more difficult task and in a large field of say sixteen horses the higher you are drawn the less chance you have. That one reason I feel there are so many high drawn horses in the sprints at Beverley withdrawn before the start. Trainers give their excuses but why would an owner want to pay transport costs to

Beverley plus jockey fee etc to run from a draw giving them little chance of even getting into the frame?

B) Thirsk over five furlongs on firm ground favours high drawn horses and again it's not often a low drawn horse wins a sprint here. If you are drawn low at Thirsk on firm ground your chances of winning are slim even with the best horse in the race on form.

C) York has had a bias for a very long time in races over a trip of 10 furlongs. The problem here is that the wider your are drawn in the stall the more of a problem it is to get into the race behind the low drawn horses. Many times we have seen quality horses drawn almost in the car park in twenty plus runner races and as a result they have no real chance of winning. A solution is difficult... perhaps reduce the size of fields but then sponsors wouldn't take too kindly to it. Perhaps we just note the problem and take a bad draw as a 'no bet' in that race.

D) Chester has a huge bias in sprint races as it a fairly reasonable assumption that unless you are drawn low then your chance of winning diminishes.

These are just four courses with draw bias problems. So I am going to give you some advice and that is if you are selecting a horse go to www.drawbias.com and check out their views on the draw you need to win. It's free to use drawbias.com and very relevant.

Overall use this draw information as an extra tool and if your horse is not drawn favourably then don't back it.

Tuesday's Horses In Focus - By Unity Racing Investments

The weather is becoming very changeable now after weeks of sunshine we now have rain and temperatures are set to drop. It has already started to effect racing with many non runners. Mainly being pulled out because of the changing ground. This can work to your advantage though. By making notes of horses withdrawn due to ground conditions you can start to build a portfolio of what ground these horses need this adding another element to your betting.

Ok on to today's racing Hamilton 1-20 Maiden (Class 4) 6f - I would rather be with SMILE A MILE at 5/2 here rather than taking 13/8 about the favourite. I think the nature of this track with suit the horse well and he has a little more experience on his side which could just be the difference. His last run was decent on the clock and a vast improvement from the run before. If he improves again then he will be hard to beat. On paper he only has the favourite to worry about so he's slightly overpriced at 5/2.

Hamilton 3-50 Handicap (Class 6) 12f - LUCKY ELLEN is returning from a break and the word is that the horse is going really well at home. They think she can win this race and connections have their money down today! 9/2 currently available but that won't last long!
