Liverpool Can Beat Manchester City In Blockbuster - By

Ian Hudson

There are a number of defining matches in the Premier League that stand out from the rest of the fixtures. Liverpool's home match against Manchester City is one of the key meetings of the schedule that involves 380 matches over the course of the season. Liverpool and City dominate the betting for the title and the winner of this fixture would take a huge step towards being the champions of England. Liverpool would put a significant marker down by beating Manchester City on Sunday.

After seven sets of fixtures three teams remain unbeaten. City and Liverpool have dropped just two points while Chelsea have won five matches and drawn the other two. City have the best goal difference, have scored most goals and have the joint meanest defence with Liverpool. It looks like a three horse race for the Premier League and at the current odds Chelsea are the value option. However, the two sides above them have more quality and settled management.

Liverpool and City are playing for the manager and have bought into the plan. Jurgen Klopp and Pep Guardiola have a connection with their players who are playing as a team. Meanwhile, there seems to be something badly wrong at Manchester United where Jose Mourinho's days could be numbered. Everybody is singing from the same hymn sheet by saying his job is not under threat but defeat to Newcastle at home live on television on Saturday would be a huge blow.

In the context of the winners of the Premier League the fixture is not important because Liverpool and City are on a different planet to United. It's galling for fans that their two closest rivals are being successful playing attractive football. Something has been lost at Old Trafford since the departure of Sir Alex Ferguson. If Mourinho is fired its time to give one of Fergie's protégées a chance. There is only one job that would tempt Ryan Giggs to quit as the manager of Wales and he could be the right man to be the next manager of Manchester United.

Newcastle are good opponents when you are desperate for three points. They have lost four of their last five Premier League matches and look destined for the drop. The owner refuses to put his hand in his pocket and the manager, Rafa Benitez, will soon get totally fed up and could be gone. United lacked confidence and created very little in the goalless home draw against Valencia in the Champions League. It won't be pretty but United can secure a narrow win over Newcastle.

If Liverpool and City fight out a draw Chelsea could leapfrog them and sit at the top of the table after the weekend. However, to reach the summit a home win by eight goals or more against Southampton on the road is required. Southampton are two places above the relegation zone after just one win in seven matches. They have not won a home fixture from three this season and beating Chelsea looks beyond them. The visitors have the quality to win this match by at least one goal but not eight.

Brighton host West Ham in the Friday night match but will struggle to secure a home win. Brighton's home form kept them in the Premier League last season and so far they have won, drawn and lost a fixture at the Amex. West Ham have picked up seven points in three Premier League matches and scored eight against Macclesfield in the League Cup. The Hammers are a team in form so can beat Brighton in this match.

Arsenal are the only team with a perfect record over the last five matches. The season started with two defeats but the opponents were Manchester City and Chelsea. Fulham have won just one of their first seven matches in the Premier League so beating the form team at home on Saturday may be beyond them. However, the far more significant match is at Anfield where Liverpool can beat Manchester City.

Arsenal Can Beat Qarabag Tonight

When Arsene Wenger was the manager of Arsenal Thursday was a night off as the side had played in the Champions League on one of the previous two nights. It was only in his last season in charge that he had to work on Europa League night. Arsenal usually qualified for the Champions League but they had to settle for playing in its little brother last season and reached the semi-finals.

The club have missed out on the biggest domestic Cup competition in the world for another year so Thursday is a match night. Arsenal visit Qarabag in Baku tonight. The new manager is Unai Emery who won the Europa League as the manager of Sevilla three times from 2014 to 2016. However, CHELSEA are favourites at 5/1 with bet365 to win the Europa League this season.

The waters are muddied by the fact that eight teams who missed out on qualifying for the knockout stages of the Champions League join in for the round of the last 32. Generally the groups in that competition go to form but some decent teams could finish third in their group and play for the consolation prize. Arsenal are the only team in the Premier League to have won their last five matches. Qarabag have lost all but one of their last five Europa League fixtures. Form and wealth means ARSENAL are the team to back to win this match at 47/100 with William Hill.

The Grand Final of the Super League is played at Old Trafford and St Helens are favourites to win the competition at the Theatre of Dreams (which is not a very apt title just now). The Saints could bring some joy to a stadium that is grim when Manchester United are playing at home. St Helens play Castleford at home in the semi-finals this evening. They won 11 more points than their opponents during the regular season and Super 8s so ST HELENS -8 is the bet at Evens with Coral.

The handicap chase over two miles and four furlongs at Warwick (4.20) is a trappy little race. The six runners are competing for almost £10,000 in prize money which makes it the most lucrative race today. TEMPLEHILLS has won at a higher level and is a course and distance winner so is the tip to win this race at 15/8 with Ladbrokes.
