Today's Sports Betting Preview - By Rick Elliott

Newcastle Out At Blackburn Tonight

Rafa Benitez is used to dining at the top table of the Champions League and not fighting for scraps in the FA Cup. His Newcastle side are at Blackburn in a replay for the right to play Watford at home in the fourth round. In theory Newcastle have two winnable ties that could take them into the last 16 and three matches away from playing in the final of the FA Cup.

Newcastle last lifted the trophy in 1955 and have won the Cup six times. The club owner would probably swap 10 FA Cups for Premier League survival so Benitez's team selection for the Blackburn tie will be revealing. NEWCASTLE are 70/1 with Betfair to win the 2018/19 FA Cup but they could be out tonight.

Blackburn are now becalmed in mid-table safety in the Championship. They have too much quality to be dragged into the relegation mire but slightly off the pace in the race for the play-offs. Rovers have played 14 matches at home in all competitions this season and suffered just two defeats.

Newcastle have not won on the road in the FA Cup since 2006. Benitez will probably send out a weakened team and his priority is dragging the club away from the relegation places. BLACKBURN are on a good run of form and that can continue by beating Newcastle in 90 minutes at 7/5 with Coral.

Andy Murray lost his first round match in the Australian Open but is considering extending his career to Wimbledon with more surgery. The procedure will probably only be a sticking plaster and the career of one of Britain's best sportsman is coming to an end. There may be one last hurrah at Wimbledon but his appearance will be more ceremonial than as a competitor. Sentimental punters may back MURRAY at 10/1 with Coral, a price that is missing at least one nought.

On an average day for racing there is a decent hurdle over two miles at Fairyhouse (2.00). On form and ratings there is a lot to like about Oscars Den and Inca Gold ticks many of the right boxes. However, there is a progressive horse in the field who has won five times on the Flat and took a decent handicap at Leopardstown over Christmas. TRY AGAIN is weighted for a good run at 7/2 with Betfair.

Three Trainers In Form... Watch Them Closely - By High Roller Racing

I have looked carefully at progress being made and this week I have unearthed three more trainers it could prove to consider next week or so. Look carefully at their entries and then see which horses they actually run from their declarations. For example one trainer has a horse entered for three races and normally one will be selected as their best option.

Our first trainer to take note of this week is Nicky Henderson who seems to have capitalised on the better ground during this first part of the season. As you would expect from current champion trainer Henderson has plenty of entries in the coming week so note them down and see what each horse has and where Nicky chooses to run them then make your mind up as to bet or not. Whatswrongwithyou has a couple of entries and looks like winning sooner than later. Henderson trains not far from Newbury and has around ten entries for this weeks meeting at that course... he rarely comes away without at least one winner! Dieu Benisse and Elusive Belle attracted my eye based on their performances to date. Nicky has several entries at Ludlow later in the week and again Ganache and Gallachers Cross attracted my early vision should they actually run. So Nicky is a man to keep on your side after all he is a master of this sport.

Richard Fahey has made a particularly good start to the year but has not had multiple runners like he does normally on turf. The all weather seems to attract selective entries from Richards yard. He is in great form so far this year. There are quite a number of all weather meetings this coming week and following Richard Fahey could be a profitable venture. I have a few of his string that I have chosen as likely candidates for the Winners Enclosure including Benjie, Ivory Charm and Grise Lightening. All three are entered this week and are showing signs of being able to win sooner than later. So keep Richard Fahey on your side this coming week.

Our third trainer to consider is Jeremy Scott who had a slow start to the season but is now in the form of his life having had 23 winners from a relatively small string of horses. Strike rate overall is seventeen per cent so after the slow start is taken into account that is pretty decent. Jeremy has quite a few entries and I like the look of four of them but I do not know if they will actually run... There lies the problem. Should Jeremy choose the races I like then I think all four could have a chance. They are Chance It, Garrane, Our Dots Baby and Native Robin. But you need to see the entries, then the declarations and access in your own mind whether you like the chance of the horse or not... if not then leave it.

Tuesday's Horses In Focus - By Unity Racing Investments

We are still ahead of the game this month. The last week has been a little more challenging as we haven't managed to add to our impressive gains. We haven't lost our shirt either though and we are only a winner away from making new all time highs.

That winner may come today as we back... Kempton 5-15 Handicap (Class 6) 6f TICKS THE BOXES 12/1 with Betfair.

The horse has had a ton of runs and has been largely regressive on the face of it but the horse has had some problems and has also had an inflated mark for most of his career. He's not been seen at Kempton for a few years and last time he came the form didn't look great on the face of it but that was in a class 2 event from the bottom of the weights off a mark of 81 and he wasn't far away despite finishing nearer last than first.

Today he goes off at 45 and I'm hoping he puts his best foot forward. He's had a few runs on fibre sand lately and the best of them was a staying on second under this jockey and hopefully he can get a good tune out of him.

It looks a good bet at double figures! I'm going to leave it there today as I am heading out to see a horse I'm looking at for a friend of mine i'll give you more details next week on this horse - it's a son of Geordieland and I think he could be a really nice type, he certainly looks like his dad in the photos so it will be interesting to see how he moves.
