Could Man United Win The Champions League?

When bookmakers starting paying out you know something is a done deal. Fred Done once famously got egg on his face when weighing in punters who backed his beloved Manchester United to win the Premier League only for Arsenal to overhaul them on the run-in. But if you had a bet on Ole Gunnar Solskjaer being the next permanent manager of the United the winnings will be in your account with some bookies.

No team in the history of the European Cup and Champions League had recovered from a two goal deficit from the home leg to progress. After doing that against PSG MANCHESTER UNITED are 8/1 with Paddy Power to win the Champions League and with Ole at the wheel anything is possible.

Norwich are the top scorers in the Championship and always perform in front of the cameras. In 12 televised league fixtures they have won 10 and drawn the other two. They are live on TV tonight against Swansea at Carrow Road where they have scored three goals or more in six of their last eight fixtures. The home team have found the net more than twice in all but one of eight matches in the Championship.

Norwich are not solid at the back and in 16 matches both teams have scored in all but three occasions. Swansea have let in at least one goal in eight matches on the road. The statistics suggest goals and most for Norwich but Swansea are improving and could avoid defeat. The best bet is OVER 3.5 GOALS at 13/8 with bet365.

There is plenty of racing today but its all quite ordinary but there is a decent handicap over one mile and four furlongs on the All-Weather at Dundalk (7.45). Chaparral Dream is progressive but the handicapper could have caught up with the horse. Active Approach has a decent profile but has not run for 228 days. At a bigger price ALHAJJAJ makes some each way appeal at 8/1 with Paddy Power.
