Today's Sports Betting Preview - By Rick Elliott

City Face Test At Tottenham's New Home

Manchester City have won the League Cup, play Watford in the final of the FA Cup and only have Liverpool to beat to win the Premier League. The quadruple is alive and kicking but the biggest challenge is winning the Champions League. Tonight's quarter-final first leg match at Tottenham's new stadium will be a huge test. This time last year City could not handle the welcome or atmosphere at Anfield and were soundly beaten by Liverpool 3-0 and could not overturn that result in the reverse match at the Etihad. MANCHESTER CITY are 9/4 with bet365 to win the Champions League.

City have only failed to win two of their last 23 matches and have won the last eight. Only Manchester United have won the FA Cup, Premier League and Champions League in the same season (1998/99) but City can go one better by winning the lot. They have played eight times in the Champions League this season and those meetings have produced 34 goals. Tottenham have been impressive in the Champions League and their four forward threats are fit and ready. In a potentially high scoring match the best bet is BOTH TEAMS TO SCORE at 8/13 with Coral.

In the other quarter-final match Liverpool are at home to Porto where they have not conceded in seven of their last nine matches in the Champions League. Liverpool are the shortest-priced favourite to progress to the last four and beat the same teams 5-0 on aggregate in the last 16 last season. They continue to win matches with late goals and Porto could be stubborn opponents tonight. Porto have the best defensive record in domestic football in Portugal and a narrow defeat tonight keeps them in then tie. LIVERPOOL TO WIN TO NIL looks interesting at 10/11 with bet365.

The richest race in Britain today is the Class 2 handicap over one mile and two furlongs at Pontefract (4.30). Dukhan will have the ground to suit but a five pounds hike in the weights after a win on his last start 164 days ago may be too much to handle. Central City is stepping up in grade but keeps on improving and could be ahead of the handicapper. However, AASHEQ is definitely well handicapped so is the more solid option and can be backed at 6/1 with Coral to win this race.

Tuesday's Horses In Focus - By Unity Racing Investments

It was incredible to see TIGER ROLL win his 2nd national! It confirmed what we said that the horse looked unbeatable despite the weight burden. He goes down in history as the 2nd horse ever to win 2 nationals' unbelievable achievement!

The Scottish National runs on Saturday. It looks like the ground will be good or firmer so that rules out plenty of soft ground horses. We were hoping Glen Rocco would go but sadly he has an abscess in his foot and although it's healing well he wouldn't want the ground to firm up so they will put him away as they look towards last year's National. That is unless the ground is soft for the Bet365 chase at Sandown.

This horse needs a trip to be seen at his best. Certainly, one for the notebook!

On the Flat this year we have a horse to watch out for in training with HUGO PALMER the horse is ANIMATEUR and he is a lovely looking Chestnut colt one of the first crop of sire ANJAAL. He looks a strong powerful type who walks well and has a lovely long stride. He's a very impressive looking 2-year-old and I expect him to really make his mark this year. Hugo has kept a share of this horse for himself and I think that could be significant.

Another horse to look for is the Mark Johnson trained STREAK LIGHTNING another Chestnut 2-year-old from NIGHT OF THUNDER looks an imposing sort with plenty of scope and plenty of class on the Dam side as well. This horse has all the attributes to be world class. I just hope he can show it on the track. NIGHT OF THUNDER looks an excellent prospect as a sire. I've seen plenty of his first season crop and they are a very handsome bunch and I'm pretty sure he will make his mark as a great sire this year and for years to come.

The Effects of The Draw On Flat Turf Courses In Ireland - By High Roller Racing

Do you back horses on the Flat in Ireland? Do you take into account the draw your horse has? Were you aware that the draw can affect the chance that your horse has of winning?

I will try to deal with courses and distances that have a bias and if I don't mention a track or distance it is because there is normally no bias.

The Curragh has a slight bias to high drawn horses over 7, 8, and 10 furlong trips. In general this is a very fair course with sprint distances seemingly has no bias.

On the all weather at Dundalk middle to low drawn horses seem to have an advantage and approximately 50 per cent of winners in handicaps over six furlongs have been won by the bottom third in the draw when 10 plus runners. Over a mile there seems slight favour in a low draw. The remaining distances, including 7 furlongs, seem to have little bias.

Gowran Park is a very fair track but over 7 furlongs on soft ground a high draw seems an advantage but on firm ground it's a low draw that appears better.

Down Royal has a favour in sprints for middle to high draw. This is no surprise though as the highest draw is next to the rail. The 5 furlong trip turns sharply right two furlongs out this further advances the high draw bias. Over 7 furlongs the middle to high draw is again favourable.

Fairyhouse has a bias on softer ground in 6 and 7 furlong races where a high draw is most important. Over 9 and 10 furlongs there is a bias towards high drawn numbers and the low drawn horses struggle to join the party at Fairyhouse.

Ballinrobe has an advantage to high drawn horses over 5,6 and 7 furlongs.

Bellewstown has an interesting stall bias requiring usually a middle to high draw in sprints but a low draw over a mile. It is very interesting that the horse drawn in stall one over a mile in 10 plus runner handicaps have won 6 of 16 races here in recent seasons.

Cork has no bias in its sprint distance races but over 7 furlongs you need a high draw and results show this to be a very strong bias. Horses drawn in stalls 1 - 4 seem to have very poor results. Low drawn horses also struggle over 8 and 10 furlong trips where a middle to high draw has a definite advantage.

Galway seems to stage a lot of races over 7 furlongs and it is shown a high draw seems essential. The bias seems to even out over 8 furlongs yet low drawn horses seem to struggle over 12 furlongs at Galway.

The courses mentioned today seem to have the most interesting of bias to draw in Ireland. Courses not mentioned seem to have little bias overall.
