Reds Can Beat Blues On Sunday - By Rick Elliott

Surely it can't be a coincidence that the fixture list has thrown together huge derby matches in Liverpool and Manchester on the same weekend. The TV companies call the shots so it seems that Sky Sports are behind the scheduling of Liverpool v Everton and Manchester United v Manchester City on Sunday afternoon. In a fixture list of derbies West Ham play Chelsea at home on Saturday but the exception is Leicester's trip to Newcastle United on the same day.

City are eight points ahead of United in the Premier League so a draw at Old Trafford would be a satisfactory result. A home win would reduce the gap to five points so the match is a true six-pointer. The winning team picks up three points but also prevents their opponents adding to their tally of points. This is correct for any match but is much more significant when it involves teams close together in the table. City have a superior goal difference of 10 goals which is worth an extra point.

The outcome of the match could depend on the thought processes of the City manager and players. Does Pep Guardiola send his team out to avoid defeat and maintain the eight point gap or chase the game and risk losing it? Jose Mourinho would probably take the former route and ensure a point but a man with Barcelona running through his veins may take the more positive approach. City are the best team in the Premier League and have dropped just two points in 15 matches so can win anywhere.

When Sir Alex Ferguson was the manager United often won these crucial matches at home. He took the view that he had the best players who could beat all-comers at their best. United took charge in fixtures of this nature but under Mourinho they have become more passive when avoiding defeat was seen as more important than winning. However, now is the time to be brave and United can keep the Premier League pot boiling by beating City on Saturday. Lose the match and United will not overhaul City at the top of the table.

If City win every other match in the league this season which is unlikely but not impossible there will be a quiz question in years to come. Which was the only team to prevent City winning during the 2017/18 Premier League season? In light of recent events the answer may be surprising because Everton are the only team the champions-in-waiting have failed to beat this season. The Everton side that drew with City at the Etihad in August looked to be going places but it all went pear shaped.

Everton have regrouped and after two wins are now in the top half of the table. However, they are six places and 11 points behind Liverpool who are cock-a-hoop after scoring seven goals against Spartak Moscow in the Champions League. Liverpool are one of five teams to qualify for the knockout stages from the Premier League. It's the first time ever that a country has provided five teams in the round of the last 16.

Everton's Europa League campaign has been a disaster. They were already eliminated before Thursday's last group match away to Apollon Limassol. Due to health reasons Sam Allardyce did not make the trip to Cyprus and some experienced members of the squad did not travel. The result will be meaningless in the context of the Merseyside derby which Liverpool should win. The two home sides can do the double in the Derby Day Spectacular as the Reds are fancied to beat the Blue in both matches.

Toff Is The Bet Of The Day! - By Rick Elliott

Sheffield and Bristol are two of the biggest cities in England not to have a Premier League team but United and City are promotion contenders and meet in a six-pointer this evening. Sheffield United have home advantage but Bristol City have lost just once in 13 away matches in all competitions. Both sides have 37 points but the visitors have the edge on goal difference and they are currently third in the table. Neither side were fancied for promotion but they are right in the mix for a move up to the Premier League.

United have let in at least one goal in nine of their last 10 matches while City have lost just three times all season. The Bristol team have found the net two times or more in all but two of their last eight fixtures. In the last 10 matches involving either side both teams have scored on nine occasions. The match winner is difficult to call but recent trends suggest both teams to score is the bet at 8/13 with William Hill. Offence is a stronger area than defence for these teams and the match has goals written all over it.

Snow is forecast in some parts of the country so it's appropriate that the highest graded race of the day is called the Winter Novices' Hurdle at Sandown (2.30pm) and a horse called White Moon is a leading contender to win the contest. That's not a coincidence bet because the horse has the form to win a race of this nature. WHITE MOON has won two novices' hurdles this season and should be backed at 15/8 with Ladbrokes to win at a higher level today. Most of the field have won well this season but the selection has the potential to go on to greater things.

However, regardless of the bets in football and racing there is one wager than cannot be beaten. GEORGIA TOFFOLO is buying money when you bet on the Made In Chelsea start to win I'm A Celebrity at 1/9 with Betfair! That's an 11% return on investment that she's the last Z-list celebrity to leave the jungle for a chat with Ant and Dec. Sadly I haven't got a clue whose going to win Strictly Come Dancing!

Can we win the Ashes? - in 2019 - By Bet World Reviews

What a sorry state of affairs in Oz. Quite apart from the poor display by the national team in the Ashes it appears that a 1984 state of affairs is prevailing in Adelaide. The BBC correspondent was issued with a fine for crossing a road in the early hours of the morning at a non designated crossing. The fact there was no-one else on the street was apparently irrelevant.

Like me I'm sure you receive a large number of service invitations and take notice of the source if these as trust is a vital part of the process. Well I have been receiving recommendations for services recently through sources that should know better. One extolled the virtues of a service provided through Jon Roberts whose latest front is Equine Investment Management Services which laughingly claims to be the UK's leading online provider of betting advice. Just look at the myriad of service reviews and complaints about them before you decide!

Another major house recommended subscribing to a service called Lee Bollingbroke Racing – his claim is to be the UK's favourite tipster! Again the reviews for this character (also known as John McCracken) will tell you a lot as will the fact he only shows his recent winners on his results page. Take great care if you receive an invitation to join – many have lost significant sums through taking his advice.

In my spare time I am trying to move things forward to improve the level of protection available for the ordinary punter in relation to all betting services and products. I have several direct experiences that I can draw upon as a starting point in the quest but would really appreciate having a larger sample of cases where the punter has been wronged. If you have such experience please email me and let me know the service name and I will then contact you for more details when the time is ripe.

Our reviews are continuing with some initial thoughts hitting the site every week now. I have also updated some of the long standing reviews which have seen some mixed fortunes.

Banker Bets – had a bit of a struggle but on way up again?

We Bet You win – was good in November but still losing overall.

Value Racing – 19 points in November. Service running for 4 years now. Still positive

CBWinbot – returned to profit in November

Just starting I am taking a look at Daily Punt, a service from long established name Anthony Gibson, All Weather Winners from Punt Hub and Fake Mug Bets Club which comes from the well respected Secret Betting Club. These have been posting some impressive results before I came along so let's hope I do not impose the reviewers curse on them.

Don't forget to check us out at Bet World Reviews and join the conversations about the current services under review. I look forward to seeing you there.
