Fleetwood Has the Profile To Win This Week By Ian Hudson

Bizarrely it's the first week of the new US PGA Tour at the Safeway Open but with the field not confirmed at the time of writing it's difficult to identify potential contenders. Ryan Moore has had a poor season but he excels on courses that put a premium on accuracy over distance so he has a chance at the Silverado Resort in California that hosts this week's event. There are better betting opportunities in the Alfred Dunhill Links Championship on the European Tour.

Moore is the main tip of the week with Golf Rater. This is WIN's dedicated golf service that has produced a return on investment of over 17% since proofing began at the start of the year. Subscribers have enjoyed a run of winners including Jordan Spieth at 16/1 in the Open Championship. You can get all the best golf bets until the end of the season at a one-off price of £14.97: CLICK HERE!

The Safeway Open is the first of the 49 tournaments that contribute to the FedEx Cup standings. It all leads to the Tour Championship in 50 weeks in September 2018. There is a delay in announcing the confirmed field because the Web.com Tour Championship finished on Monday and the end-of-season standings will determine who qualifies for the main Tour and is thus eligible for the Safeway Open.

There is an intriguing tournament in Europe. The Links Championship will be Rory McIlroy's last outing of the season before he takes an extended break. He is a player in form after finishing with a 63 in the British Masters last Sunday which left him in second place three shots adrift of Paul Dunne. McIlroy is an Open champion so can handle links golf. However he could be demob happy and have his mind elsewhere so other players with decent skill's profiles are preferred.

The Links Championship as the name suggests is played on three links courses in east Scotland. Golfers play St Andrews, Kingsbarns and Carnoustie in rotation over the first three days and the final round is played at St Andrews on Sunday. It's also a pro-am event so 60 players and 20 teams qualify for the final round at the Home of Golf. Rounds can take up to six hours so players must have the temperament to cope.

The three host courses are links in nature but vary in design. However, the main skills for good scoring are driving distance, greens in regulation and average putts per round. The weather can be quite nasty on the east coast of Scotland at this time of the year so the week can be a mental and physical struggle and patience is needed to get through and contend over the weekend.

Tommy Fleetwood has an excellent profile and can win this season in Europe for the third time. He is miles ahead of Sergio Garcia in the Race to Dubai after the best season of his career. He has won at world championship level and was fancied to win the British Open at Royal Birkdale. As the local player the pressure was too much in his first round but he recovered to post a top 20 finish on a course near his home.

Branden Grace is a links specialist and former champion. In fact he won the event in 2012 and is two-times winner of the Qatar Masters on a course where wind can be a factor. The South African has not won anywhere this year but his skills and course experience suggest he can get in the mix. Grace combines distance off the tee with accurate iron play and is a good putter so he can contend this week.

Byeong Hun An won the BMW PGA Championship in 2015 and that is excellent form. His form has dipped since then but at his best An is a quality player with the skills to contend. He is tall of stature and hits the ball a relatively long way. An controls his approach shots and putts well and that gives him a good chance of winning the 2017 Alfred Dunhill Links Championship.

World Cup Treble That Pays Fifteen-To-One! By Rick Elliott

When England beat Slovakia away from home last September in World Cup qualifying it was significant in two ways. Not only was the match Sam Allardyce's first and last match in charge Adam Lallana scored his first goal for England after about 100 tries. If that wasn't a big enough shock for the Slovaks now they have a fixture in Glasgow on a cold October night. SCOTLAND are making a late charge for the playoffs and can get closer by beating Slovakia tonight at Hampden Park (6/4 with William Hill).

England will beat Slovenia at Wembley and just about qualify for the finals in Russia next summer but Northern Ireland are 12/1 to beat Germany at home. There is an old saying that you should never back an away side at odds-on and Germany look way too short in the betting. Germany lead the group and Northern Ireland have secured second place and only a home win would prevent the current status quo being maintained. A DRAW would be a perfectly acceptable result for both parties and that outcome can be backed at 4/1 with Ladbrokes.

The treble on England, Scotland and the Northern Ireland vs Germany draw is the standout acca of the night at 15/1 with bet365.

There is a horse called Molineaux running at Warwick today (2.45), in black and gold colours. Not only are the owners Wolves fans they also have Thistlecrack in their team. The horse is on target to run in the King George V1 Chase at Kempton on Boxing Day but all roads lead to the Cheltenham Gold Cup in March. Thistlecrack is 5/1 with Coral to win the Blue Riband of chasing.

Molineaux is very much League 2 while Thistlecrack is the Premier League. However, Colin Tizzard has found the right level and the horse should go close if running up to his best form. A handy five pounds weight allowance due to the jockey's inexperience can help MOLINEAUX win today before the excitement of another evening of World Cup qualifiers!

The Jumps Season Is Nearly Here - What You Must Do To Profit By Eddie Lloyd

The start of a new season sees new and old alike starting their campaign for their respective code. The all-weather season is a little easier to grasp in my opinion whereas the jumps season can become a rather complex affair for us punters and traders alike.

We have horses that are running for the first time since last spring and on top of that we have changing ground conditions. The bookies usually clean up at this time of the year and straight up punters be warned it's not the time of year to necessarily be agreeing with the market.

However, having said that it can be an absolute profit pit for punters if they do their homework. I've listed some of the pointers that I look for in a horse when researching what to back/trade on. Although fairly obvious at first glance it would be worth noting that I ignore the market until I have found such a horse.

You'd be surprised at some of the big prices that can be achieved early on and thus resulting in a profitable trade or massive value that will profit you in the long run.

1. Look for horses that have proven to run well after a long lay off. They don't necessarily have had to have won but some that have gone close or placed could well be worth backing if running fresh.

2. When researching the night before check the weather forecast. I find the BBC site fairly accurate. If the course has declared soft the evening before but the forecast is for torrential rain then look for horses that perform well on heavy ground. Back them early as the market will react as soon as the rain comes. You could be one step ahead.

3. Keep an eye on trainers that have just the one runner and are travelling over 100 miles to enter the horse. They too will be aware of the weather and if it's still declared at 10pm the night before then they must fancy its chances. Always back this up however with your own analysis. This information can sometimes go unnoticed in the market especially the night before.

4. Last of all when you see a horse pulled up or unseated rider displayed as either PU or UR in the form look a little closer as to what happened. Horses can be dismissed by the market rather too quickly for such figures in the form but sometimes if the form was half decent before hand they could represent some good value.

So to sum up. Do your homework and you'll find opportunities out there that can help you profit in the long term.

England Will Beat Slovenia At Wembley Tonight By Rick Elliott

England have played Slovenia five times and conceded five goals. So on average they concede a goal a game to a team 40 places below them in the FIFA world rankings. Wales are now the highest ranked British nation and the trend for England is to drop. The rankings provide a good form guide which means England should beat Slovenia in their World Cup qualifier at Wembley tonight and 3-1 is the potential correct score.

It seems to be the same old story with qualification. England breeze through their section and are suddenly contenders for the World Cup or European Championships. Sooner rather than later it all goes pear-shaped in the matches that matter most. Sadly we have seen it all before and Gareth Southgate does not have the nature to inspire the nation or its 11 best football players.

Every time there is a tournament imminent England fans are optimistic. From August to May England players look like world beaters and it all goes wrong in June. These days England are home from tournaments before the start of July and the business end of the tournaments that really count. It's too simplistic to say England's best players play too many matches. The core of the Belgium national team play in the Premier League and they are fifth in the world rankings. The demands of the league don't seem to unduly affect Hazard, De Bruyne and friends.

There are many examples from past tournaments but in the current era you look at Harry Kane. He has been the top scorer in the Premier league for the last two seasons and is knocking in the goals again. At Euro 2016 he was hopeless and was struggling to get within the corner flag from free kicks just outside the box. Something happens when players like Kane play for England in major tournaments and it will happen again. Southgate is a civil servant and not enough players qualified for England are regulars for their clubs in the Premier League.

England have won four of the five meetings with Slovenia and drawn one, scoring 10 goals and conceding those five. Both teams have scored in three of those fixtures and there have been more than two goals in the same number of matches. The latest fixture was the reverse tie in World Cup qualifying which was a goalless draw in Slovenia. England win matches of this nature at Wembley and 3-1 is the most likely correct score as history suggests Slovenia will find the net.

Marcus Rashford and Kane are proven in the Premier League and this must be there time. Rashford had his first start for Manchester United in February 2016 but he is already an integral part of the United and England first team. He is still a teenager but can reach the top of the game and could well play for Barcelona or Real Madrid at some stage in his career. It's about time a player of his calibre produced for England at the World Cup...but don't hold your breath.

If England avoid defeat against Slovenia they are almost through to the finals in Russia next year. In eight group matches they have won six and drawn two, scoring 16 goals and conceding just 3. England have the best attacking and defensive record in the group but it's a poor section and even Scotland can still qualify. The three points will inevitably be secured at Wembley but the result will not tell us much about how England will get on when the serious stuff begins.
