Liverpool Can Win Six-Pointer Against Chelsea - By Ian Hudson

It's rare when the majority of fixtures in the Premier League kick-off at the traditional time of 3pm on Saturday. There were no Europa League matches involving English clubs on Thursday night which causes matches to be put back and the Cardiff against Burnley meeting is the only live match on Sunday. It's more about quality than quantity with one of the blockbuster fixtures of the season when Liverpool play Chelsea at Anfield in the second live match on Saturday.

The teams met in the third round of the EFL Cup at the same ground on Wednesday night. The managers may play the second strings because picking up three points is much more important than progressing to the next round of the League Cup. Ahead of the Cup game Chelsea had scored exactly one goal in the last nine meetings with Liverpool. Both sides won their first five matches in the Premier League but Chelsea have now dropped points and Liverpool have not.

This is a fixture that doesn't often involve many goals. Before Wednesday night's match only two of the last nine meetings produced three goals or more. However, under the current managers both sides are more attack minded and both teams should score on Saturday. The match truly is a six-pointer and the gap between the teams at the end of 90 minutes could be between five points in Liverpool's favour or one point in favour of Chelsea. A home win is the most likely outcome.

The days of Anfield being a fortress are back and Liverpool are tough to beat at home. Last season they won 12 and drew 7 of 19 home EFL matches so went unbeaten, scoring 45 goals and conceding 10. Only Manchester United let in fewer goals at home and only Manchester City had a better positive home goal difference. Chelsea lost six league matches on the road last season. Liverpool were the biggest spenders over the summer and the outlay can be justified with three points from this match.

The early match sees Manchester United meet West Ham at the London Stadium. The deal to play where the Olympics took place was attractive but its debatable whether the positives outweigh the negatives. The advantage of playing at Upton Park may be more urban myth than a reality and United have a good recent record when they visit the East End. West Ham looked a decent outfit in beating Everton on the road and then took a point from Chelsea at home but United should win this one.

At the start of the season Cardiff were most people's pick for relegation and an immediate return to the Championship. There has been some huffing and puffing but a 5-0 home defeat to Manchester City says it all. A few teams will be soundly beaten by the champions this season but the manner of the defeat suggests Cardiff are out of their depth. Burnley are free of the distraction of the Europa League and beat Bournemouth 4-0 at home last weekend. The good form can be maintained with an away victory in South Wales on Sunday.

Bournemouth will be looking to get their season back on track the following night when Crystal Palace visit their south coast. Palace lost three on the bounce but have since picked up four points from two matches. However, the opposition was not strong and the manager of Bournemouth knows if they stop Wilfried Zaha they stop Palace. The players can achieve that objective and earn three points against Palace.

Justin Rose Is The Ryder Cup Top Scorer Pick

There are 16 pairs matches and 12 singles in the 2018 Ryder Cup which means as individual there are 48 points up for grabs. There are 12 players in each side so on average the number of matches per player is four. The leading scorer at the Ryder Cup in 2016 was Thomas Pieters with four points and he played in all five sessions. Five Europeans did not sit out a match but only Jordan Spieth and Patrick Reed were ever present for the Americans.

The leading points scorer this week will have to play at least four matches so that means we should focus on the tried and trusted pairings. Justin Rose and Henrik Stenson were paired in three matches two years ago and they should be teaming up again this week at Le Golf National in Paris. It would be appropriate if the world number one was the overall leading points scorer and JUSTIN ROSE can be backed at 10/1 with Ladbrokes to be just that in France.

With no major soccer matches in the UK this evening we have to look at American Football for some sports betting action. The Thursday night match in the NFL is Minnesota at LA Rams. The home team have scored 102 points in their first three matches and conceded 36 for a point's difference of 66. Minnesota have a negative point's difference of 15 so the overall variance is 81 points. Three fixtures is a small sample and all things have not been equal but LA RAMS -6.5 at 10/11 with William Hill is the sports betting nap of the day.

It's the first day of the Cambridgeshire meeting at Newmarket and the competitive handicap over the Rowley Mile takes place on Saturday. The highlight of today's fixture is the Group 3 race over seven furlongs (3.35) for colts and geldings which are male horses. The race is confined to horses aged two and all seven runners carry nine stone and there are no age and sex allowances. Races of this nature often run to form and two thirds of juvenile contests are won by horses in the first three last time out. There are four qualifiers today and CARDINI is the form choice at 5/2 with Betfair.
