Scotland Could Miss Out On Promotion

The UEFA Nations League has proved worth its weight in gold for England but the concept has been a damp squib for Wales and the two Irelands. Things could go either way for Scotland who must beat Israel tonight at Hampden Park to secure promotion. Both sides are on six points but Israel are ahead as they beat Scotland at home in the reverse fixture. On collateral form against Albania the home team should have the edge tonight but the price looks too short to justify a bet. A point is enough for Israel as they can win promotion with a DRAW and that outcome is 13/5 with bet365.

Meanwhile Wales are playing a meaningless friendly in Albania. It's difficult to understand what can be gained from a difficult journey to play one of the weakest teams in Europe. Ryan Giggs famously developed niggling injuries when Wales played friendlies which always seemed to clear up before Manchester United's next match. The Wales manager must be grateful that Gareth Bale is available for selection against Albania. Even without their talisman and best player you would fancy WALES to win this fixture and they are 23/20 with Ladbrokes to do just that.

The winners of tonight's FA Cup first round replay between Oxford and Tranmere play Southport at home in the next round. That tie would seem like an easy route to the potential for a glamour tie in round three but Southport are a team in form and are storming up their league. A trip across (or under) the Mersey is better than a journey to Oxford. Southport should get their preferred outcome because TRANMERE are the team to back to win this tie in 90 minutes at 3/4 with Coral.

The good news is that Enable stays in training and will try to become the first horse to win the Arc three times next October. The bad news is that the racing today is far more mundane with derisory prize money up for grabs over three meetings. There are just 26 runners in total in the six races at Fakenham. DEREK DUVAL looks overpriced at 10/1 with Betfair to win the richest race on the All-Weather card at Lingfield (2.40) where the going yet again is Standard.

Three To Follow This Coming Week - By High Roller Racing

Three trainers who are in very good form must be a source of winners in the next week or so and for your information they are Henry De Bromhead, Tom Lacey and Simon Crisford. Henry and Tom over the National Hunt and Simon on the Flat.

Henry De Bromhead is in sparkling form at the moment despite losing star hurdler Identity Thief last weekend to a fatal injury. A horse remember for his victory in the Stayers Hurdle and Aintree last season. Henry must have been pleased with Honeysuckle, a four year old filly, after her successful debut at Fairyhouse and she looks one to follow up. Henry has a £130,000 filly in Sinoria who makes her debut at Thurles this week with 'whispers' for her from a contact... she is a well bred half-sister to Minella Rocco and apparently one to be interested in. A highly rated horse from this yard is Valseur Lido who should return to action at Thurles and may prove the class act in the Listed race entered for. Watch Henry for entries and declarations.

Tom Lacey only has a small yard but is very much an upcoming trainer. Thomas Patrick didn't win at Sandown last week but was very gallant in defeat... he is a horse to follow from this yard. The yard is in good form and one fact is his strike rate of 31 per cent at Chepstow... interesting fact. Tom runs two at Chepstow on Wednesday they are Dorking Cock and He's a Goer both looking as strong possibilities. Both horses ran well last time out and warrant severe respect at Chepstow this week.

Simon Crisford our third and final trainer to follow always seems in good form but just lately not too many runners but plenty of good results. So far in November the stable has saddled four winners at time of writing. All of the entries in the near future need to be considered with the yard in its current form. Bobby K, Eden Gardens and Red Mist have entries this coming week and could easily improve Simons current statistics. So I suggest Simon is followed in the coming week or so.

Tuesday's Horses In Focus - By Unity Racing Investments

I'm currently in Lanzarote waiting for my flight back home. The only thing I don't care for much out here is having to go through vps in order to get my bets on. Every thing else works a dream.

A few worthy winners this week but we are still a little down for the month. Nothing we can't put right though and a winner or two will see us hit profit again. We still have plenty of bets lined up!

Mark Crehan has today got the ride on anonymous John, the horse put up a gutsy win last race and today they are hoping Marks claim can negate the penalty. 6/1 looks fair but the horse will have to run up to his best. We have some great bets lined up today on the main service so now could be the time to get involved we are going in to a red hot December!
