Today's Sports Betting Preview - By Rick Elliott

Banker Premier League Double On The Cards

If you are going to have one bet this weekend it should be on West Ham to beat Fulham at home tonight. Fulham have spent most money of the promoted teams but they are by far the worst of the three. They have won just two points out of 39 on the road. Fulham are eight points from safety but four defeats in five matches is relegation form and there seems to be a resignation to that outcome.

West Ham are not the most consistent team at home and have only won 5 out of 13 Premier League fixtures at the London Stadium. However, some decent players are returning from injury and Fulham have scored just three times in nine away fixtures. WEST HAM should be long odds-on to win this fixture but you can back them at 17/20 with Betfair and that price cannot be missed.

Cardiff host Watford in a non-televised fixture and the visitors have the quality to leave South Wales with three points. Cardiff have done well to reach 17th place as they did not go on a spending spree after promotion from the Championship last season. Relegation is still a distinct possibility but they have scrapped in fixtures and have won the last two in the league.

However, WATFORD are into the last eight of the FA Cup and just two points off seventh place in the Premier League so are also bankers to win tonight at 7/5 with Coral. The team combine a decent level of fighting spirit with some quality and that mix should be enough for a win in Cardiff tonight. If you want to gild the lily the DOUBLE on today's two football tips pays about 7/2 with Betfair.

The number of Nationals is becoming ridiculous and Exeter stages the Devon version today at 4.20. It's a handicap chase over three miles and six and a half furlongs and a test of stamina on good to soft ground. Cobolobo should be suited by the trip but does not have the form in the bank over fences. JEPECK has won races in the points sphere and can translate the form to a regulation race and is the bet at 6/1 with Coral.
